Bachelor of Arts in Asian Studies

Why Should I Major in Asian Studies at Seton Hall?

Students interested in diplomacy and international affairs, business, and education find knowledge of Asia critical for vibrant careers. Asia embraces 60 percent of the global population. China, Japan and India are among the top five consumer nations, having major implications for international relations, business and environmental concerns. By majoring in Asian Studies at Seton Hall University you will gain a broad understanding of the rich histories of Asia, acquire insights into the vitally important political, economic, cultural, social and religious dynamics of the region, and master an Asian language. These achievements will lead to rewarding career options.

The Curriculum:

The department of Asian Studies offers courses in Asian area studies and training in Arabic, Chinese (Mandarin), Filipino and Japanese languages. The language curriculum is within the national standards and proficiency guidelines of the American Council of Teaching for Foreign Languages. Area courses address the civilizations, cultures, histories, economics, politics and religions of Asia, with an emphasis on Northeast Asia because of its global impact.

What Does It Take to Graduate?

In addition to the University requirements, the Bachelor of Arts in Asian Studies requires 48 credits: 24 credits in one Asian language, 12 credits in traditional and modern China and Japan, 6 credits in Asia-related social sciences and 6 credits in Asia-related humanities courses.

Career Opportunities:

Career opportunities for those with a Bachelor of Arts in Asian Studies include diplomacy and other work in international relations, business, teaching (high school and college levels), academic research (think tanks and government), lobbying, government or military area specialization, interpretation/translation, journalism, and work in nongovernmental (NGO) and religious organizations. The Bachelor of Arts in Asian Studies is an excellent foundation for graduate school. Opportunities for continued studies with the department of Asian Studies include the Master of Arts in Asian Studies and a dual master’s degree in Asian Studies and Diplomacy and International Relations. Students can also apply their bachelor’s degree to graduate work in international affairs, international economics, international finance, business and trade, government and comparative political systems, comparative religions and philosophies, Asian art, and doctoral-level studies that focus on many additional aspects of Asian culture and affairs.

How Do I Apply for Admission?

Send your application to Seton Hall University and include the $55 non-refundable application fee ($45 if applying online). Freshman applicants must submit official high school transcripts and any college or university transcripts where credit was attempted, plus the results of the SAT I or ACT assessments. Transfer students must submit transcripts from each college or university where credit was attempted. Those with fewer than 24 earned credits must complete the freshman requirements. Applications are available at admissions.shu.edu.

Can I Get Financial Aid?

Almost 90 percent of the students who entered Seton Hall last year received some form of financial aid, and 75 percent of these students received money directly from the University. The four types of financial aid include scholarships, grants and discounts, loans, and part-time jobs on campus.
